FOREWORD

THE pleasure and pride with which we welcome our veterans of the World War can never be measured by words. Enfield is fortunate indeed to number you among her sons and daughters;—you whom we greet to-day and you who, returning no more, can be met in spirit only. You have given much—the greater part. But, watching your deeds, your trials, your sacrifices overseas, we who could not follow you have striven each to do our part as best we could, and to keep faith with you. With our deepest appreciation of the sacrifices you have made, we ask that you accept and preserve this souvenir of Enfield's war record both abroad and at home, as an expression of the gratitude of her citizens.
